Part I Reading Comprehension (60 marks, 60 minutes)

Section A

Directions: There are 4 passages in this part. Each passage is followed by some questions or unfinished statements. For each of them there are 4 choices marked A, B, C, and D. You should decide on the best choice and mark the corresponding letter on Answer Sheet 1. (40 marks)

Passage one

Questions 1 to 5 are based on the following passage.

To hear most recent research tell it, coffee is a miracle drink. The magic beans will prevent skin cancer and Alzheimer’s (老年痴呆症), reduce heart failure and diabetes (糖尿病) risks, heighten focus, and maybe protect liver health. The miracle drink even decreases suicide risk, according to the newest study that justifies our coffee addictions.

According to a study performed by Harvard School of Public Health and published this month in the World Journal of Biological Psychiatry, people who drink two to four cups of coffee each day are less likely to commit suicide than those who don’t drink coffee, drink decaf, or drink fewer than two cups each day. The study followed over 200.000 people for at least 16 years. And it is not just a weak link: the researchers found that the suicide risk was cut by around 50 percent for coffee addicts.

This is not the first time that researchers have discovered that coffee and smiles might go hand in hand. A 2011 study found that women who drink coffee cut their risk of depression by 15 percent compared to those who don’t. Michel Lucas, the head researcher of the most recent study, told The Huffington Post that coffee addicts can thank caffeine for the good news. The drug may actually act like a mild anti-depressant by adjusting levels of happy hormones.

Of course, there’s plenty of research out there that doesn’t look so kindly upon coffee drinkers. Recently, the New Yorker published an article arguing that while coffee may heighten focus, it also puts a squeeze on creativity. And of course, coffee’s well-known negative effects like insomnia (失眠症) and disturbed sleep cycles still hold.

Regardless, we’ll raise our mugs to this most recent study for justifying our coffee addictions once again.

1. Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a possible benefit of drinking coffee?

- A. reducing heart failure risks
- B. protecting liver health
- C. preventing skin cancer
- D. improving eyesight

2. According to a study performed by Harvard School of Public Health, people are less likely to commit suicide if they_____.

- A. drink fewer than two cups of coffee each day
- B. drink more than four cups of coffee each day
- C. drink two to four cups of coffee each day
- D. don’t drink any coffee each day

3. The reason why coffee can cut the suicide risk lies in that _____.

- A. it can heighten focus
- B. it can cure skin cancer
- C. it may help to prevent depression
- D. it may make people less creative

4. One of the negative effects of coffee is that it _____.

- A. costs a lot of money
- B. disturbs sleep
- C. makes people fat
- D. causes coffee addictions

5. What might be the writer’s attitude toward coffee drinking?

- A. positive
- B. hostile
- C. indifferent
- D. tough

Passage Two

Questions 6 to 10 are based on the following passage.

Polar bears are classified as marine mammals(哺乳动物), like a seal or whale, which might come as a surprise given that they’re usually pictured on land. But polar bears spend a lot of their time in the waters of Arctic, fishing or swimming among the sea ice. They may look awkward in the water, but no creature with paws is a better swimmer.

They’d better be. Arctic sea ice is declining fast, robbing the polar bear of its prime habitat and forcing them to swim longer and longer distances to reach solid ground. No other animal seems to be such a direct victim of warming, which is one reason why the polar bear has emerged as the symbol of climate change. (Another is that they look so cute and cuddly.) It is simple narrative to grasp: carbon warms the climate, Arctic sea ice melts and baby polar bears drown.

But it turns out it might not be that simple. A new study by scientists at the U.S. Geological Survey(USGS) underscores the fact that polar bears really are amazing swimmers. In fact, they are so good that biologists were able to document 50 swims that cover an average length of 96 miles. The research provides clues that polar bears may be able to keep treading(踩) water even as climate change melts their habitat.

The researchers published their work in the Canadian Journal of Zoology. They followed 52 female polar bears in the Arctic Ocean north of Alaska from 2004 to 2009, using radio collars that could track the movements of the animals. They then compared the paths taken by the bears with maps of shifting sea ice over the same period of time, and found that the polar bears were world-class marathon swimmers. And those long, long dips in the ocean weren’t outliers—while the really long-distance swims were relatively rare, 38% of the bears surveyed took at least one such marathon swim.

6. People may feel surprised to know that polar bears are classified as marine mammals because _____.

- A. polar bears can not live in the sea
- B. polar bears have paws and can talk
- C. polar bears are usually seen on land
- D. polar bears are rarely pictured by people

7. What does the writer mean by saying “but no creature with paws is a better swimmer.” in the first paragraph?

- A. Polar bears are the best swimmers in the world.
- B. Polar bears swim better than other animals with paw.
- C. No other creatures with paws can swim.
- D. Creatures with paws can swim better than any fish.

8. The second paragraph is mainly about_____.

- A. the danger the baby polar bears will face
- B. the reasons why polar bears are so popular.
- C. the causes of climate change
- D. the effects of warming on polar bears

9. The underlined word “underscores” (Para. 3) is the closest in meaning to _____.

- A. emphasizes
- B. denies
- C. understands
- D. accepts

10. What did the researcher use to track the movements of the 52 female polar bears?

- A. GPS
- B. Airplanes
- C. Radio collars
- D. Maps of shifting sea ice.

Passage Three
Questions 11 to 15 are based on the following passage.

How many hundreds of heroes go unheralded(未宣布的) from the days of Underground Railroad? While we celebrate such important figures as Harriet Tubman and Frederick Douglass, numerous others were needed to make the operation of the “railroad” a success. Runaway slaves had to be given shelter from weather and from search parties. The tale of this awesome phenomenon is one of cooperation, coordination, and brotherly love.

The Underground Railroad operated as a secret organization dedicated to assisting runaway slaves from South. It was in fact an ever-evolving organization devoted to one cause: protection of one’s fellow men and women. It actually began during the colonial period. However, it reached its height in the decades preceding the American Civil War. Acts such as the “Fugitive Slave Act of 1850” increased railroad activity and popularity. The ultimate goal of the Underground Railroad was to accomplish the safe arrival of runaway slaves to Canada where the long arm of the law could not reach them. Laws such as the Fugitive Slave Act of 1793 and 1850 allowed slave owners to recapture escaped slaves and bring them back to bondage in the south.

Some historians believe this courageous organization was begun by Quakers (规格会教徒) in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Over time, the backbone of this organization became the numerous free blacks of the North. They were essential to the successful operation of the Underground Railroad. In most cases, fleeing slaves travelled by any means necessary and often on their own in an effort to reach freedom in the North. After arriving in the North the people of Underground Railroad would provide assistance and supplies in an effort to get them to the guaranteed freedom of Canada.

11. Which of the following statements about Underground Railroad is true?

- A. It is a railroad built underground like subway.
- B. It is a railroad operated by the US government.
- C. It operated as a secret organization to help runaway slaves.
- D. It served as a secret route only known to slave owners in the south.

12. From Para.2, we know that the runaway slaves_____.

- A. could not afford to buy a train ticket
- B. could be captured by slave owners
- C. could not get any shelter from bad weather
- D. might reach Canada with the help of search parties

13. The Underground Railroad began_____?

- A. during the American civil war
- B. after the Declaration of Independence
- C. during the colonial period
- D. between 1793 and 1850

14. Who are essential to the successful operation of the Underground Railroad ?

- A. Slaves in the South
- B. Quakers in Canada
- C. White people of the South
- D. Free blacks of the North

15. The tongue of the passage is described as_____?

A. objective B. delightful C. pessimistic D. humorous

Passage Four

Questions 16 to 20 are based on the following passage.

We are in the midst of a heated public debate over the benefit of online education.

Yet while journalists and educators weigh in on the pros and cons of online courses, I’ve seen no mention of how online classes can lead to an increase in academic dishonesty. This past semester, I caught quite a few of my students at Cal States Northridge engaging in academic dishonesty.

I think that the incidents of cheating have increased for two interconnecting reasons. The first is the trend of packing as many students as possible into course sections as a means of saving money. The second is the structure of the online courses themselves. It is evident that these two intertwining (缠绕) trends can serve to produce academic cheating and plagiarism(剽窃).

In the wake of the Great Recession and the following budget crisis, the dean of one of the colleges I teach in increased class size by as many as 50 students in an attempt to save money. One of the non-online courses I teach was intended for 32 to 35 pupils. But when I taught the course last semester. It was composed of 82 students.

Online courses serve to exacerbate (加剧) the trend towards large class sizes. The primary motive for the increase in online courses is that they do not require physical classroom space. This allows campus administrator to cut cost by increasing the number of students enrolled in a particular course section even if they do not have classrooms.

What’s more, when students take classes online, the professor does not have face-to-face contact with the vast majority of the students enrolled in the course. As a result, one can never be sure that the students are doing their own work for there is little to stop them from paying another student to take their exam for them.

It is evident that both increased class sizes without any accompanying teaching assistance, and the structure of online courses by themselves, makes it easier for students to cheat. This not only cheapens the college degree but also makes the whole purpose of a college education meaningless.

16. The writer of the passage is most probably a _____.

A. student B. journalist C. campus administrator D. professor

17. In the writer’s opinion, one reason for the increase in academic dishonesty is that _____ ?

A. students wants to save money B. class sizes are too large
C. classroom are very small D. dishonest students are not punished

18. The primary motive for the increase in online courses is that _____.

A. They are new and modern
B. They can improve the education quality

C. They do not need physical classroom space
D. They are convenient for both students and teachers

19. One form of the academic dishonesty mentioned in the passage is that _____.

A. students copy term paper without being noticed
B. students don’t do any homework
C. students don’t attend classes regularly
D. students can ask someone else to take exams

20. The author’s attitude towards online education is _____ ?

A. negative B. friendly C. neutral D. supportive

Towards the end of high school, when it came time to start thinking about what colleges I was interested in applying to, there was only one thing on my mind: I wanted to get away from home. I was the elder of two 36, and had begun to feel the urge to be on my own, that I was 37 to take charge of my own life.

Even at the time of being accepted to Virginia Tech, I was 38 at the prospect of starting over, with new faces, and new things to see and do.

But as the time arrived to 39 my bags and prepare to leave, the reality of what I was doing hit home hard. I 40 as I realized that I was going to be eight and a half hours away from everything and 41 that was familiar to me. I was leaving the town where I had 42, and all the things about it that I loved.

For the first few 43 after arriving at school, I thought that I was not going to make it through the year. 44 a tearful call back home, I grabbed one of the few books in my suitcase. Chicken Soup For the Teenage Soul, and I headed down to the library to read a few stories. They had always been able to 45 me up before, and I was hopeful that they 46 now.

On the way out, I passed another girl in the hallway. She 47 the book in my hand and smiled, saying that she had the same book in her dorm room, 48. I took a chance, and invited her to come to read with me. Being as 49 as I was, she agreed, and we found our way onto the library.

Before we knew 50, we were surrounded by girls who like us had either read 51 owned the book, and who loved it as much as we 52. As I watched the tears 53 everyone's faces and the smiles grow as we all read, I realized that I was not alone.

The days went on, and I still 54 home---but the campus was beautiful, the people were 55, and it became better and better as the school year continued.

Section B Short Answer Questions

Directions: In this part there is a short passage followed by five questions or incomplete statements. Read the passage carefully. Then answer the questions or complete the statements with no more than 10 words. Please write your answers on Answer Sheet. (10 marks)

Is there anything more harmless than a turtle? (Unless, I suppose, you’re a nice, leafy, vegetable.) Turtles and tortoises—the main difference is that turtles dwell at least partially in water, while tortoises live exclusively on land—are slow—moving, peaceful animals whose main form of protection from the outside is a hard shell. Not for nothing do we have the fable of the slow and steady tortoises winning the race. Turtles have existed in some form for more than 220 million years, outlasting their early contemporaries the dinosaurs (恐龙). Long-lived turtles and tortoises are symbols of perseverance in the natural world.

Unfortunately, the rules of the race are changing. Turtles and tortoises are among the world’s most endangered vertebrates (脊椎动物). Only primate (灵长动物)—human being excepted—are at greater risk of being wiped off the planet. The threats are numerous. The animals are collected by traders, eaten in the wild and in fine restaurants, used as pets and for traditional medicine, and sometimes simply killed. The very adaption that once made them so successful—their long adult life span and delayed sexual maturity—has made them vulnerable as the world around them changed, mostly thanks to human beings.

A 2011 report from the Turtle Conservation Coalition makes it clear: we need to act if we’re to save the turtles and tortoises.

“We are facing a turtle survival crisis unheard of in its severity and risk. Humans are the problem, and must therefore be the solution. Without concerted conservation action, many of the world's turtles and tortoises will become extinct within the next few decades. It is now up to us to prevent the loss of these remarkable, unique jewels of evolution.”

As we mark World’s Turtle Day on May 23, spare a thought for these armored but endangered creatures.

56. The main difference between turtles and tortoises is that the former can sometimes live in water while the latter only live _____.
57. For turtles and tortoises ,their main form of protection from the outside world is _____.
58. Long-lived turtles and tortoises are symbols of _____.
59. One of the threats turtles and tortoises face is that they can be used for traditional _____.
60. According to the passage, who is to blame for the turtle survival crisis?

Part III Translation (30 marks, 30 minutes)

Section A From Chinese to English

Directions: Complete the sentences by translating into English the Chinese given in the brackets. Please write your translation on Answer Sheet 2. (15 marks)

61. He will not rest _____ (直到他知道真相) .
62. _____ (如果我昨天没生病) , I might have come to school.
63. Tell him to go to _____ (我们经常上英语课的那个教室) .
64. The color _____ (看上去是绿色而不是蓝色) .
65. _____ (不要把书落下) , you will want it.

Section B From English to Chinese.

Directions: Translate into English the underlined sentences in the following passage. Write your translation on Answer Sheet 2. (15 marks)

66) I heard a shocking conversation between two diners in a restaurant the other day. One lady was deciding whether or not she should have a green salad, fresh fruit or fries as a side dish with her meal. 67)Her friend said, “ don’t get the fruit, it makes you fat.” “Fruits makes you fat? ” she asked. “It has tones of calories” replied the friend. The lady ordered fries with her meal.

Can fruit make you fat? My favorite quote about fruit comes from Steven Kates, personal trainer and founder of one of my favorite wight loss products “Lifesize Portion”. In the industrial video for life size he talks to a client who is astonished that she can eat a number of bananas. 68). “No one gets fat from eating bananas.” he says.

He's right. 69).Of course, the woman in the first conversation is right too. Some fruits are higher in calories. And for dieters with diabetes, the sugar in fruit may limit the amount they should eat. 70). But for the average person who wants to eat a healthy diet, fruit is a good thing. You can overeat any food, but really, when’s the last time you heard of someone overeate kiwi?

If you are concerned about the calories count in your fruit, here are a few numbers. Whole fruit provide more fibre, usually takes longer to eat and is more likely to make you feel satisfied for a long period of time. For the sake of comparison, I’ve included the calories counts for a few other snacks foods you might be tempted to eat instead of the fruit.
